architecture + interiors

The image shows the interior of a modern church, likely the Church of the Holy Spirit in Berlin, designed by Herzog & de Meuron. The architecture is characterized by a complex, organic wooden structure that resembles a forest of tall, slender trees. The ceiling is a series of interconnected wooden beams and trusses, creating a dynamic, sculptural form. The walls are also made of wood, with large, arched openings that allow natural light to enter. The overall atmosphere is one of warmth and light, with the wood tones ranging from light beige to deep brown. The text "ELEVATING THE EVERYDAY" is overlaid in white, sans-serif capital letters across the middle of the image.

About ZINN

ZINN architecture + interiors strives to develop creative solutions and unexpected strategies that prioritize an occupant's experience above all else. Our best work enriches the lives of our clients and users by framing their activities in their best light.

We are a small firm so all aspects of the work, from proposals to construction administration are open to all team members, allowing multiple opportunities for engagement and development but also requiring a willingness to help in whatever way is needed.

Our work is approximately 50% single-family which includes home renovation and ground-up projects. We try to understand our clients completely and provide designs that both meet their goals but go further to create a space that is uniquely crafted around them, their family, and the home's context.

On the commercial side, we work on a wide range of projects that typically value design as an integral part of the business's brand identity, market strategy, or workplace ethos. From conceptual developments and parks to office interiors, the common thread is a desire to create spaces of high quality that people want to visit or occupy.

Our work environment is calm and friendly and team members support each other in whatever ways are needed despite tenure or position. To us, creating work we can all be proud of is the ultimate goal.
